SHIFTING OF CARS HAS TO BE ACCOMPLISHED WITH THE GREATEST CARE

(By Annociated Press.)

BERLIN, March 29.-As German forces press on into Russia; the problem of adjusting German standard gauge railroad coaches to the wider Russian tracks arises. Everywhere else in Europe the rails are 1435 millimeters apart, but on the Russian roads they are 1524 millimeters

For some time certain cars and trains plying between Germany and Russia have been equipped with interchangeable axles which at the border can be shifted in a few minutes, but the majority of the German rolling stock is not so fitted, especially the passenger cars.

The shift from standard to broad cuage is accomplished by shunting ears traveling Russia-ward from the standard track into a sort of turn able, out of which lead the broadguage rails. In this table or pit the German car is jacked up by means of four auxiliary cars, one at each orner, the standard guage wheels tre removed and in their places are attached sets of wheels fitted to the broad gauge tracks. The auxiliary cars, operating under their own power, then propel the German coaches ilong until the Russian tracks are
